T.K. Thorne

“Somebody Must Die”

If you’ve ever watched more than one episode of Star Trek, you know when Captain Kirk, Spock, and Doctor McCoy step into the transporter with a red-shirted crew member, that man is marked for the chopping block. If laser beams spurt about or some poisonous alien flower is blooming, red-shirt is doomed. Why? The answer to that question is an important key to making your fiction work and keeping your reader turning pages.

Thorne has presented at several conferences, including Historical Writers of America, The Carnegie Writers Conference (keynote) and return engagements to the Alabama Writers Conclave and Chattahoochee Valley Writers Conference. Her MSW and career in law enforcement have given her insights into the psychology of using story and emotion to engage readers, insights which have led her own novels to garner multiple national awards.

- “You held us spellbound!”
  - “More!”
- “...so relevant to my writing struggles.”

Bio:

T.K. Thorne’s childhood passion for storytelling deepened when she became a police officer in Birmingham, Alabama. “It was a crash course in life and what motivated and mattered to people.” When she retired as a captain, she took on Birmingham’s business improvement district as the executive director before retiring again to write fulltime.

Both careers and a Masters Degree in Social Work from the University of Alabama provide fodder for her writing, which has garnered several awards, including ForeWord Reviews’ “Book of the Year for Historical Fiction” for her debut novel Noah’s Wife and Angels at the Gate, the coming-of-age story of Lot’s Wife, which won the Benjamin Franklin Award for historical fiction. The New York Post’s “Books You Should Be Reading” list featured her first non-fiction book, Last Chance for Justice, which details the behind-the-scenes investigation of the 1963 Sixteenth Street church bombing case. Most recently, Thorne explores murder, mayhem, and magic when a police officer discovers she’s a witch in her newest novel, House of Rose, the first of the Magic City stories.

She loves traveling, especially to research her novels, and speaking about her books and life lessons. She writes at her mountaintop home near Birmingham, often with a dog and cat vying for her lap.

“...a terrific storyteller.”
